

ABSTRACT

A medical electrical lead component includes a groove formed in a surface of the component and a resistance weld formed between a portion of a conductor positioned within the groove and the component.